A Bryan pole was erected last night on Toledo street. Major McFadin spoke until discouraged, to a group of children and interested ladies. The event was carefully advertised, but as usual, there were other attractions more enticing to the voters.

Persons in the habit of leaving their horses stand in front of the downtown stores, and in front of residences, are warned by the police to discontinue the practice, or they will be punished under an ordinance compelling them to hitch the animals. Runaways often occur from this practice and injuries to persons and property often result.

The public has little realization of the embarrassments that sometimes comes to a daily paper. The Journal moved into its new press room yesterday. Its gas engine was not in working order and it depended upon water power. The college fire burst a main on Fourth street, and there was no water. Yet it appears as interesting and as full of news as usual. It is seldom that any combination of circumstances stop the publication of a daily, but the public has no idea of the energy and resources sometimes necessary.

CANTON TOMORROW.
The McKinley Train to Leave Tomorrow Morning.

The program of the McKinley train will be as follows: Train will leave the Vandalia depot at 5 a. m. tomorrow promptly, and arrive at Canton at about 2 p. m., where the delegation will be escorted to the McKinley home. The crowd will be presented by Hon. W. T. Wilson, and after McKinley's address the crowd will look over the city and return to the depot and leave at 5 p. m. The crowd pledged for the Canton train now numbers nine-two and those who have promised to go and have not given in their names will please do so today. The guarantee is for 100 and that number should be on hand.

BARB'S SCHOOL HOUSE.
There was a most encouraging meeting in the cause of Sound Money last night at Barb's school house near Galveston. The house was crowded with interested listeners, and all remained until the meeting was concluded. There were many Democrats present. The speaker was DeWitt C. Justice, and his talk was a forcible and logical argument against fiat money and half good dollars.

IN TWO DIRECTIONS.
The Sound Money Emissaries are Cordially Greeted.

Robert J. Loveland had a rousing meeting last night at Lucerne. There was an excellent turnout of the people, and the arguments of the able speaker for Sound Money were heard with the closest and most flattering attention from first to last. The Royal Center Sound Money Glee Club, made up of nine young men, sang four cheering songs in fine style, and received many compliments and congratulations. The meeting was a success in every way.

G. B. Hawthorne and J. W. McCorkle, of Shawnee Mound, Tippecanoe county, with about a dozen other delegates to the National meeting of the Horse Thief Detective association, which has been holding at Warsaw, stopped in the city out of curiosity, to see and hear Bryan, the faith healer. They state that a vote taken in the convention of their association, showed 72 for McKinley and 48 for Bryan. These men gathered from all over the Union to protect the farmers.

Four weeks from today Mr. Bryan will be reading the returns from Indiana.

IS RUINED

The Old Smithson College Burned to the Ground

PILE OF BROKEN BRICK

Marks the Site of the Once Beautiful Seat of Learning.

Might Have Been Saved but for an Unfortunate Accident.

Loss Estimated at About $65,000, With Insurance of $35,000.

The main building of the old Smithson college, better known as the Michael's college, is a complete ruin. Fire having swept through the four stories and leveled the inner walls, blackened the outer walls which were left standing, and caused destruction variously estimated at from $50,000 to $65,000. The detached building to the North of the main building, and the kitchen and dining room adjoining the main building on the North were alone saved from destruction. But for the unfortunate bursting of a fire in the boiler of the fire engine, the two lower floors of the main building would have been saved from complete wreck, and the loss would have been materially lessened. As it is, a few bare and blackened walls, piles of broken brick and gaping holes where windows were, is all that is left of the handsome old college building.

The fire started in a small room in the northwest corner of the main building, on the third floor, used as a storage room for stationery. J. D. Williams, janitor of the buildings, was working on the lawn, raking up the fallen leaves on the North side of the campus, when he happened to glance up to the corner of the main building and saw smoke issuing from the windows. It was just 2:55 o'clock when the fire was discovered, and Mr. Williams immediately gave the alarm. The sixty-five students in the building rushed pell mell from the burning structure, and by the greatest of good fortune escaped serious injury in so doing. There were some forty or fifty of them who roomed in the dormitories and these succeeded in saving all of their personal effects.

The alarm was telephoned in to the fire department and a general alarm was turned in, all of the four companies responding. The steamer was also brought out, as it was impossible to get pressure enough on the water mains to reach the buildings, though there is a water plug at the lower corner of the campus. The steamer was attached to the water plug, two lines of hose were strung, and the firemen were sent at the fire, which was confined to the third floor and attic so far. One line of hose was sent to the roof of the kitchen annex, and the other to the roof of the detached one-story building on the North of the main building. The pipemen directed the streams of water into the windows of the third floor, and were succeeding admirably in checking the progress of the flames, when a fire in the boiler of the steamer blew out and the department was powerless.

As soon as the water ceased pouring in onto the third floor, the flames gained renewed life and within twenty minutes the whole building was a mass of flame. The sight was a grand one, though none the less a sorrowful one, and as the many hundreds who had gathered to lend what aid they could, realized that nothing could save the building from total destruction, a murmur of sympathy arose.

The tall tower on the Southeast corner of the building had withstood the flames, and it seemed that it would stand through the fiery baptism, but when the water ceased to pour in on the flames, the renewed heat sapped the already feeble supports and the spire fell with a thunderous crash. Two chimneys on the North side of the main building, and near the Northwest corner swayed and threatened to topple with every breath of the furious gale that was blowing from the North. The supports were burned away for thirty feet from their tops, and when finally the second floor caught and blazed up angrily, a sudden strong gust of wind sent the one farthest west crashing against its neighbor and both fell into the seething mass of flame below. A great cloud of dust and smoke arose from the ruin, lighted with millions of burning brands and sparks, and lurid tongues of flame leapt to the top of the skeleton walls. The partition walls in the Southwest corner fell shortly after this, and carried with them the South wall of the main building. A draft was what the staggish demon had been awaiting, and as the dust and smoke cleared away after the fall of the walls, the lurid flames darted hungrily up and within five minutes the entire first and second floors were a mass of flame. The destruction of the building was assured, and that, too, after the firemen had virtually gotten the upper hand. As soon as the fire in the steamer was blown out by the immense pressure of steam the engineer had crowded on, the engine was uncoupled from the hydrant and hurried to town for repairs. In less than an hour the steamer was back, ready to take up the work, but the delay was fatal and no power on earth could have saved the main building from being destroyed.

The steamer was still useful, however, and to its use after the repairs had been made can be attributed the fact that the whole group of buildings were not wiped out. The one-story and basement building on the North and East of the main building, and the kitchen building on the West of it were saved. The firemen kept two streams pouring on the mass of ruins until a late hour last night, two companies remaining on the spot.

Prof. Michael was at home when the fire broke out, but was on the scene shortly afterward. There was nothing to do but to stand and watch the destruction of his hopes, and he had many sympathizers as the crash of falling walls and the roar of the flames almost drowned the hum of many voices. The school opened the fall term on the first Monday of September, and the prospects were exceedingly bright for a successful year. There were sixty-five or more students enrolled. The first school year had given the school a good name throughout the country, and in consequence the outlook was exceedingly bright.

IT WAS A LANDMARK.
The Old College Has Had An Eventful History and Its Destruction is Regrettable.

The destruction of the old Smithson college marks an epoch in the history of Cass county. Founded originally as an institution of the Universalist creed, it has passed through many changes and has seen adversities, and now, in the day which seemed to be fraught with the greatest promise of a successful future, it is destined to be but a memory, for it is extremely improbable that it will ever be rebuilt.

In the early Seventies Joshua Smithson and wife, residents of Vevay, and strong believers in the Universalist creed, devised two-thirds of their large fortune to the church of their choice, for the purpose of founding a number of institutions of learning over the State, in the name of the Universalist church. The most important of these schools was finally secured to this city, when the widow of the late Philip Pollard donated a tract of twenty-five acres of ground and twenty thousand dollars in cash toward the erection of the necessary buildings. The site, was on the brow of a hill, commanding a view of the entire city, and a more suitable spot could not have been found. The corner stone of the college was laid in 1871, and the dedication of the buildings took place the following year. There have been many changes in the ownership of the institution since that time. It did not prove a success as a church institution, and has been supported by the citizens of Logansport through many changes, from normal school, private school, to a business university, and the final venture promised more or success than any of the previous ones.

Prof. G. W. Michael secured control of the institution in 1895, putting twenty thousand dollars of his own money into it; in addition to a sum subscribed by the enterprising citizens of Logansport. He has since expended some fifteen thousand dollars in improvements so it is said, and the once neglected campus was made to blossom like the rose gardens of the East, while the buildings were put in thorough good shape.

Prof. Michael was too much disturbed yesterday to know definitely what his plans would be. The loss is estimated to be about $65,000, as follows: Buildings, $50,000; furniture, $7,500; stationery on hand, stock used in supplying students in the college, $7,500. The insurance is $34,500, the

MEETING POSTPONED.
The regular meeting of the McKinley club will be held this week on Saturday evening, instead of Friday night, at the rink, on account of the Loveland meeting for Saturday. The members are urged to turn out in full force to meet Mr. Loveland.

REGULAR DRELL.
The members of the McKinley Escort Guards met last night for regular drill at the Grable feed yard, the rink being entirely too small for the movements of the large body of marchers who attend the drills. Almost the full company was present last night, and showed much improvement.
